REPORT #4 TO THE FETZER FOUNDATION

Prepared by Joseph R. Jochmans

THE BIMINI ISLANDS

There are several levels of information that I would like to share. Just recently, within the last three weeks, I went down to the A.R.E.'s Edgar Cayce Foundation in Virginia Beach, and spent eleven hours in the library there, going through many of the different Cayce readings dealing with the Bimini area and some of the different prophecies and predictions and material that he was getting into dealing with the islands themselves. I have some copies of the transcripts themselves, and I wanted to first share some of this information.

There was one reading that was done in 1926 by an individual who wanted to know about oil drilling or oil production around the island. The reading itself mentioned that the oil production would be very low, for this is a coral structure in the greater part. However, he did say: "But this is the highest portion left above the waves of once a great continent upon which the civilization as now exists in the world's history found much of that as would be used as means for attaining that civilization." There are indications in this other reading that there are some other buried treasures from various ships. He was talking about one particular ship that went down in 1839 which had a lot of bullion: silver, gold and other aspects associated with it. However, his main emphasis was not on that, it was basically looking at the Bimini area as having a rich heritage of past civilizations of a tremendous amount of knowledge and wisdom which is stored there on many different levels.

There is one particular later reading that is a discussion on whether the Bimini Islands can be utilized as a resort area. It was interesting because there was one particular reading in which he says: "This is as a truth which may be stored away again, not expressed by those who would endeavor to make a resort or city here. There are as has been given many people being born again into the earth's plane, who were through their experiences in this land. With the building, then again, we find the innate desire will come to innumerable number to be in some manner or way associated; either as dwellers for a portion of the time or the whole time, or the investors in the project, to make this not only a habitable place, but as resort equal to none." So there is a tremendous potential that he was talking about here, even just from the level of this being a resort area. But I think that he had more than that in mind. Another aspect of this same reading, he says: "There will be seen that on the northern portion of South Island," (he's talking about South Bimini Island) "will lend itself to the water supply which is one of the first considerations of such a place. A sweet water, one that lends itself to being adaptable, not only for the drinking purposes, but for all purposes of the human body." I think this is very significant. He is mentioning here that there is what he calls (and he repeats this several times in the readings), "a sweet water." It is not just simply potable, it is not simply drinkable, but there are certain properties within the water itself that will be for all purposes of the human body. In other words, it will have an overall healing effect. There are other researchers, for example Dr. David Zinc, and Dr. J. Manson Valentine and others, who believe that the fountain of youth that Ponce de Leon was trying to locate was actually located on the island itself, on the South Bimini Island, and that this water does have a rejuvenation process. There are other indications from the Cayce readings, also from other materials, which suggest the same individuals from Atlantis who were involved with the healing aspects of this site, when this site was a part of Atlantis of old, those individuals who were into healing work would gather back again into this work, not just simply as a resort, as Cayce mentions, but more specifically, in terms of the healing aspect. So I think there is a tremendous potential here in even merely considering Bimini Island, that we are drawing to ourselves those individuals who were healers before, and who will be healers again, utilizing the energies of this land and its waters.

This particular reading continues in saying: "This will be found," (he's talking about the water now), "by drilling to the depth which will be true enough below the sea level, yet the source is from far, far away. Better water will be found than in those lands known on the continents." This is quite a surprising statement. In other words, the water is going to be much sweeter, much more potable and of course, have more healing property, than anything that exists on the American continent. I think it is very interesting today, with all the pollution of some of the ground water tables that is happening, that this will be a very special source of water. He mentions also as the reading continues, "This also lends to the modes of manufacture or electro-hydro-power in the waves, if necessary by the tides since it has been and are being builded in the Bay of Fundy. For with the walls, as may be built in the western coasts of the inlet, that ^{may} ~~me~~ closed or left open or builded for the purpose of an inland sea for the boat, the port, and for the fishing, bathing, and the like. This may be builded in such a manner, on the northern shore of the south island and southern shore of the north island as to facilitate the power sufficient to electrify the whole of the lands that may be claimed and reclaimed." So, he's mentioning that as far as a power source for the island, there is such a difference, a run in the inlet, the running of the waters in the inlet for purposes of hydroelectric power. He mentions the Bay of Fundy; this is one of the primary areas where this kind of generation, using tidal action, using the waters of the tides running back and forth, for the electrical power. This, I think would be far better than trying to bring in electrical power from somewhere else, or to use other different aspects. Of course I think that solar power, also, would probably be beneficial for the island as well.

In a reading from March 2, 1927, Cayce goes into a whole section, in which at that particular time, the financing for the resort area of the island was going to be accomplished: "We would seek, rather, those with the money powers in Cleveland and Detroit, for these have such a vision. For as again may be stored away by those that would go about to accomplish such an undertaking, there are those associated with the Dodge millions, the Dodge accumulations, that once ruled in power here, and these approached in the right way and manner, would be willing, glad and anxious to see such an undertaking carried on here." What he is mentioning in this particular part of the reading, is that the multi-millionaire Dodge family, at that particular time, in 1927, there was a potential for them to be the financiers and backers for the development of this resort plan for the Bimini Islands. This (of course) did not come about; you are dealing with the ^{soul?} sole urge and ^{soul?} sole fulfillment. It says that there are those within the Dodge family who once ruled in power. In other words, they had something to do with the administration of this area. So that was a potentiality that did not come about, but I feel ~~that~~ there is another potentiality coming up now. I feel that with the Fetzer Foundation, with that backing, we are actually dealing with a return of many of the Atlantians of old, in terms of dealing with it, not simply as a resort, but also as a healing center. In the continuation of this reading, he mentions that there would be others involved; he mentions New York, or in the northern places, he also mentions "a combination of Detroit, Cleveland, London, and Paris, be that which would be the more satisfactory for those who would undertake to bring about that which would prove in this place as the resort premier above others, for this may be accomplished in this place." So he's mentioning that the development of this location of Bimini as a resort place, even on that level, would attract various different enterprises from New York, from Detroit, from Cleveland, and also London and Paris. He goes into some of the details later on. He mentions that as far as this area is concerned, "there will be within these developments, many things that have as yet not even been thought of or considered, that would not only of themselves attract the great hoard, but would also attract great wealth. For this is of the first highest civilization that would be uncovered in some of the adjacent land to the west and south of the islands."

This is a carry-over into another series of readings, however, he does mention that as the questions in this particular reading were going on, the questioner was asking, "What about minerals to be found here?" Cayce talks about gold, spar, and something called ictheolyte(?) which I think has never really been fully identified. Icthe is a Greek root word dealing with fish. Now whether this is something to do with fossilized fish, I have no idea. I know that throughout Florida you have what is called "cochina rock," which is a type of rock made up of ground up fossil shells and fish fossils, so there may be some reference to that. The question was then asked, How deep in the ground will this be found? (talking mainly about the gold and the different minerals). Cayce answered, "In the wall that would be builded from the western portion of the south island toward that of the prominent portions of the southern portion of the isle, these will be found in the 12-15 foot levels. The vein, as workable, would be found extending in the northeast/south^{west}~~east~~ direction. The waters of the northern portion of the south island, sweet water..." You see, he mentions again about the sweet water.

Another question was, How much would it take; what amount would be necessary for this complete development? (We are talking about the resort area.) Cayce said from 75 to 90 million dollars. You have to realize this is 1927, before the depression, before the Wall Street collapse, so I have a feeling that would be only a small part of the total cost of this. However, in this reading, he is talking mainly about the resort development. I'm not really sure if the Fetzer Foundation is looking at developing a resort, which could be more of a secondary aspect to all of this, but I think that the main emphasis is going to be on the healing.

The question was made: Name individuals that would undertake the financing of the proposition, and procedure to obtain their support. Cayce said, "Those groups as given: preferably those in the Detroit and Cleveland vicinity, cooperating with those of London and Paris, the Londoner of slower action of a safer basis." So, it was an aspect of the money peoples, particularly the Dodge family that is mentioned again many different times, but that has passed. I think what is happening is that while that potentiality did not come about at that particular time, I think that the forces are moving now again to bring others back again, whether they have come back into new lives from the past, or whether we are dealing with another influx of souls that are dealing with this. One of the readings that has come through very strongly is that there is very definitely an influx of souls that is going to be working with this.

There was then some discussion talking about where the fresh water would be found: what depth. The question was asked, How deep will we have to drill for the fresh water? Cayce answered, "892 feet." What supply would be obtained? Cayce answered, "1,800 gallons per hour. The electro-hydro-power would be made from that condition as may be builded as given, which would supply all of the power necessary for any project that might be even undertaken here. For this would become not only a strategic point in the affairs of this continent, but of others, as has been in the aeons past." Now what he is saying here is that there is going to be something happening on Bimini Island that is above and beyond the resort aspect that was being asked about. He is saying (and I think this is a very important point that he makes here), that this is going to be strategic for certain activities taking place, not only in America, but on other continents as well. So there is something of an international implication to what the potential is for developing, not just simply the fresh water, but the electro-hydro-power aspect that will give enough energy for the different projects and affairs that would take place here.

There were some additional questions concerning other supplies of water. The question was asked, Could an additional supply of water be obtained by going deeper? But Cayce is saying that this depth of 892 feet is the strata for the water. "Other supplies may be obtained in various portions near here, which would only increase the amount if necessary." But he is saying that this supply would gradually increase. Cayce then mentions that the water would be of an artesian well kind of water supply that would flow out and over the top.

He mentions also about the sweet water, that this water is pure water, but that it contains a trace of silicon, of lime of magnesia, that has very specific properties. "These can be changed as brought as given this may be only increased by the heating or the various conditions as may be brought to same. For, as a health resort, as the building up of the general body and as of the whole system ¹see." So this is a direct reference that the kind of resort that he was talking about was not just simply a vacation resort, but he was trying to indicate here that this would be a health resort for the building up of the general body and as to the whole system. In other words, we are talking about a holistic health center, health resort, health clinic, or whatever you want to call it. This seems to me to be one of the strongest indications that Bimini was meant to be; the potentiality is there to create an internationally known health resort that would be dealing with the waters in particular, the sweet waters that he talks about would be utilized, not just simply for drinking water, but also for healing. There may be mineral baths here, spring baths, as well as different applications for water for drinking purposes, for massage purposes, for mud baths; really there is a tremendous potential here that he is tapping into.

He also says that "the sulfur waters may be obtained where there is seen an old channel on north end of the south portion of the north island. These we find, will be of the black sulfur, yet for certain conditions, and for the baths as may be instituted through the same, will be quite beneficial to health and especially to those of the neurotic conditions, nervousness, and of the germ of rheumatic conditions. This will be found in only 89-90 feet down." So, not only do we have sweet water, which he talks about that has trace elements in it that will be of a beneficial purpose, but he is also talking about other sources of water here at a far less depth, 89-90 feet; sulfur water which contains a high ^{sulfur} content, what he calls black sulfur that can be specifically used in baths for general health, but specifically for neurotic nervous conditions, rheumatic conditions, and so forth. I think this is a very significant aspect of all this. If you are going to have a research clinic, you are going to need to have some kind of a water supply, and you are going to have to have some kind of spring water to be able to work with on a clinical basis. I am sensing from this that this is a very important aspect to look at.

There are some other later readings that were given, and he mentions that there was a certain lady, and her name is given later on in some of the other materials, who was an aviatrix. The question is given, Could the well in Bimini be promoted and reconstructed? This lady had found a walled well that was of peculiar composition and had strange symbols. The answer was, "There has been much given through this source as to how that particular portion of what was the Atlantean period might be developed. While it would make for much outlay in money as ordinarily termed, there are certain interests that would ~~draw~~^{join} in such an undertaking." (Then, again, he mentions the Dodges and so forth.) "For it could be established as a center for two particular purposes: a regeneration for those with certain types of individual ailments, not only from the well, or waters from the same, but from the surrounding waters, because of the life in the same; and a center for archaeological research, and as such activities are begun, there will be found much more gold in the lands under the sea, than there is in the world circulation today." Now that's a mouthful right there, because he is mentioning several levels. He is saying that it could be established as a center for two particular purposes. One is a general regeneration, in other words, a healing aspect, and he is mentioning that not only do the waters in the island itself, the sweet waters, the black sulfur waters, not only do they have healing properties, but he is saying that the ocean or Caribbean waters around the island, in particular he is mentioning something about the life that is contained in the waters, that there are some properties there that have need to be explored, in terms of having certain regenerative properties as well. He is saying that this would be a center, not only for healing, but also a center for archaeological research. This taps in very well with a lot of the other investigation work (underwater exploration work) that has been done from 1968 through the last decade. There are tremendous archaeological sites there that are just barely being explored now. Dr. David Zinc, who wrote the book, Stones of Atlantis, has done some extensive research there, also, as I mentioned before, the honorary curator of the University of Florida Museum has done extensive work also, not just simply around the Bimini area, but also around the Andros Islands and other places in the Bahamas. There are all kinds of extensive ruins in this area, which have to be thoroughly explored. This is also not too far from the Berry Islands. The Berry Islands are off toward the east of Bimini, and it was in this area in 1970 that Dr. Ray Brown discovered a buried pyramid from which he extracted from a room inside of it, a round crystalline sphere, which has some rather interesting properties associated with it. Also we know from the Cayce readings and other materials that there is supposed to be somewhere off the Bimini coast, a hall of records. There is supposed to be a submerged pyramid. Cayce predicted that the first remains of Atlantis and the first inklings of the rediscovery of this pyramid would occur in 1968 or 1969, which did happen. There were many different explorers in those two years who did find the first traces of some of the submerged ruins. Cayce predicts that it will arise again, in reference to the submerged pyramid that contains the hall of records, that somewhere near Bimini, this as a result of earth changes to take place in the near future, this area will then rise out again and the pyramid will then be brought to light and the hall of records will be there. So I am sensing from this reading and from other readings that he gave that there could be not just simply a center for healing, but also a center for doing archaeological research here, and even beyond that, as a step for preparation, in other words, this would be a perfect place to have a mystery school, or some kind of a spiritual center, and also learning center, which would deal with preparing people to be able to enter into the Bimini hall of records when it does rise from the sea. Even to locate it before it rises, and to let the world know that these things do exist. I know that from other research that I have done, not just simply the Cayce material, but also other research that I have on hand, that there is a tremendous archaeological potential down there, to do underwater research, that Bimini could be a base of operations for exploring, not only the Bimini Islands, but also the Greater Bahamas, the Andros Islands, and many other submerged structures. Even off the coast of Florida, there are supposed to be some submerged structures and stone blocks there which may prove to be very beneficial in terms of discovering knowledge and information which ultimately would reflect back onto the healing aspects. I think there may be some specific records that are contained in the Bimini hall of records, and perhaps the other time capsules, that could possibly be found before that, which deal specifically with healing. One thing that I have done in the readings and have gotten the different impressions is that because Bimini, at one time, was a healing resort area, many of the records of the healing techniques and possibly even the healing instruments, the tools, the chemicals, the medicines, the instruments of power, possibly even machinery, and who knows what else, the things that were used in Bimini by the Atlantians before it was destroyed, all of that was placed within the Bimini hall of records, so that when that rises again, if there is a research clinic that is already established on the island, that could be tapped into. So what I am seeing is the potential of developing both a healing center and an archaeological research center in the Bimini area, which would go hand in hand. In other words, it could be a center for archaeological research, not just simply in the Bimini area, but also for other places in the world, that information which is brought in by the archaeological research center can then be analyzed by them and then passed onto the research clinic area and be utilized then directly for healing applications. This comes out very interestingly in the Cayce readings; he says, "establish as a center for two particular purposes: Both regeneration in healing and as an archaeological research center."

Now in the last part of that same paragraph, he says, "and as such activities are begun, there will be found much more gold in the lands under the sea than there is in the world's circulation today." As I said, that is quite a statement. There appears to be indications as he talks about in the other previous readings, of some kind of a vein of gold that runs through the harbor area where the inlet is. This would be located when that port facility would be further researched, and further built.

There was a letter here given by a person named Durham. This was added to the files in 1972. This person mentions that in December of 1969, they visited the island of North Bimini, and they were following the directions that were given to find the well site. The individual, Durham, mentioned that, "I walked from the residence now located two miles from the north end of the island to the southern most point. I found only one old channel as described in the readings, and in it I found a well. The well was lined with stone and a large one, as hand dug wells go, so it ^{must} ~~much~~ be deep. However, it is almost completely filled with coconuts. There are trees nearby that lean over the well and drop the fruit in the well. Nature has closed the west end of the old channel with a ridge about 12 feet high. The floor of the channel is now about 4 feet 6 inches above sea level. I was there at low tide as planned. The tide varies only about 2 feet, I was told, and this was taken into account. It might be interesting to note that the island now has a city water system with a well on the south end of the island. While there, I met a gentleman named Mr. Paul Mueneck, a farmer from Chicago, who is an association member. I told him about the well so that he might go and see it. He was there on vacation. A native fisherman told me that water used to stand in the old channel, but has not now for a long time." I have other materials that I am not going to get into the full details with, but I can make this available to the Foundation.

Other researchers who have gone down and have found other different sources of water on the island. In particular, Dr. David Zinc has found different aspects. He has found, in fact, that some of the water sources there not only contain trace elements, but they also contain slight traces of radioactivity, which can be of a beneficial nature. In other words, this would be almost like a homeopathic level of radioactivity. Dr. David Zinc is one person; there are others, even as early as 1954, there was a gentleman named Dick Wingate from Baltimore, Maryland, who visited north of Bimini and mentioned finding a massive set of buildings lying in 25 feet of water off the island's east coast. The building stones and columns could be seen in the water, and he found that not too far from the "white house on the old Lyon's estate, there was a fountain. The fountain flows a short distance away in 15 feet of sand. The remains of a thirty foot square bathing pool surround the bubbling radioactive, mineral rich water."

Other different gentlemen, particularly dowsers, Gory O. Loughlin and Verne Cameron, also with Mr. Dick Wingate, did some dowsing work around the island. They discovered, for example, that at one particular point in a mangrove swamp area there are some water sources which are very clear, very non-polluted. In other words, there is no pollution of sea or salt water into these areas. (The name of the aviatrix who first found the one walled area on the shore of Bimini, is Melanie Freeman.) They also found that there are certain places, not just simply on the island, but off the coast itself, just off the beach areas, where there is fresh water coming up to the surface. Again, in a report done from the 1979 Poseidia Institute, which was run by Dr. David Zinc up until 1979-80, when he was in the Virginia Beach area; he and a group of scuba divers, who did work off the Bimini Islands, in the submerged ruins, particularly around the Paradise Point, found particular places where there is actually fresh water coming to the surface in the middle of the sea. Certain analysis shows that not only is this fresh water coming to the surface, but there is also significant changes of temperature. It is also interesting to note that in some of the reports that were given, they found that where these rises of fresh water would come to the surface, the water was greener because of the fresh water nature and also because of the higher temperature. In other words, the water contained some kind of living organisms that rely on that warmth as part of their life process. It just might be, and I'll just throw this out for what it is worth, that what Cayce talked about, what he alluded to, that not only does the water on the island have rejuvenation purposes, but that life within the water off the coast has rejuvenation purposes. Very possibly, it may be that those organisms could be a form of plankton or seaweed, or who knows, it could be [?]spirogena, or other forms of sea life that may have, because they are tapping into the freshness of the water, and they are tapping into maybe the slight radioactivity, and the heat of the water, they may have in themselves some kind of healing properties that may need to be explored further.

In other readings, Cayce mentions more specifically that "a temple of the Poseidians is located in the vicinity of Bimini, a portion of the temple may yet be discovered under the slime of ages of sea water, near what is known as Bimini, off the coast of Florida." There are indications that what he is talking about here is not just simply the hall of records, but it is interesting that in other places around the world where you find locations of halls of records, you always find some kind of a mystery school, or the remains of temple complexes; for example, like in Giza, we have not just simply the pyramids of Giza, and the temple of the Sphinx, and the Sphinx itself, but there are all kinds of other different initiatory centers around there for learning. The same is very true of the hall of records site in Central America, in the Yucatan at Uxmal. This was a sister hall that Cayce mentioned which was a sister hall to the hall of records, not just simply in Egypt, but also in Bimini. Here again, Uxmal was a site of learning. It was a mystery school and it was also a place very much like Saqqara in Egypt, being a healing center, a place for healing and rejuvenation. So, it is very likely that the temple site that he is talking about, that is to be uncovered under the "slime of ages of sea water," is not just simply the hall of records itself, but I think that there are other structures around there that are going to be very important to tap into. These could possibly even be brought to the surface, or the knowledge could be tapped into through underwater exploration, even before the Bimini hall of records comes to the surface. Cayce predicted that the Bimini area would be made a habitable place. There is another reading where he says, "Aid may be found from the varied societies that have been founded for the geological and archaeological activities, for much will be found in Bimini." He is talking about the temple sites in particular. "These will be found in the 12-15 foot levels." In other words, you are not going down too far. Not only do you have archaeological interests, but also geological interests. We have to also remember that around the Bimini Island area, Cayce talked about this as the place where the great crystal of Atlantis once was, and probably still is somewhere on the bottom of the sea floor, but has not been located yet. It is very possible that if the great crystal of Atlantis was mined in this area, or it was built or made or manufactured in this area from a natural quartz formation, there may be other geological layers around here that contain different kinds of stones and minerals, and even the gold itself, the gold vein that he talks about, that also have specific healing properties. These would be of interest not only from a geological standpoint, but also for healing purposes as well. Cayce talks about the use of gold. For example, there^{are} readings that he gives that describe putting gold on different wounds or on different open sores; also for the rejuvenation of bones. It is very interesting that there has been research done (I am sure that the A.R.E. Clinic has a lot of this on file) which talks about putting gold bands or gold band-aids, or having bandages having gold filaments in them, placing them on either broken bones, wrapping them on broken bones, or putting them on open sores. It is well-documented that the sores and the bone regeneration has taken place far more quickly than it would otherwise. So it is very possible that, from a geological standpoint, there may be stones and crystals, and even the gold itself that might be utilized for healing purposes. These were tapped into and utilized by the ancient temples that were there at one time.

Just to reiterate this, Cayce says that the gold vein as workable would be found "extending in the northeast-southwest direction in the same area as the temple ruins," and this would be discovered by the dredging that would be needed to create the harbors at Bimini. He says, "As such actions are begun, there will be found much more gold in the land under the sea than there is in the world circulation today." That may be more of a general statement; I don't know how rich that gold vein is. It is very likely that not only (he is linking the geological aspects with the archaeological aspects) a lot of things that are going to be found are going to be dug for, in terms of healing minerals, crystals and gold, there will also be found with them different remains of the different temple sites that were once utilized in that location.

Just to give you an overview of some of the different archaeological sites in and around the area, there is the following: Since 1968, strange finds have been made in the coastal waters throughout the Carribean, notably in the Bahama banks region, at depths ranging from 6-100 feet are numerous giant stone constructions: walls, great squares, crosses, and other geometric shapes, all encrusted with fossilized shells and petrified mangrove roots, showing their great age. One of the first finds made was stretches of wall, composed of blocks ranging up to 18 x 20 x 10 feet, and weighing about 25 tons apiece. It appears to have encircled the islands of North and South Bimini to form a dike or a sea wall. It appears that the flooding that took place in this area as the sea waters were rising, possibly at the end of the last ice age, that there was an attempt made by the inhabitants of this area to try to build some kind of a dike to try to keep the waters out, and they lost the battle. They were overwhelmed by it. Some of the petrified mangrove roots in recent years have been analyzed, radio-carbon dated, as going back to at least 6000-8000 B.C. So we are putting it back to an era either contemporary with Atlantis, or at least just after Atlantis. My thoughts on this are basically that the area of the Bahamas that was above water was a civilization that was probably a colony of Atlantis that survived after Atlantis was destroyed, but then itself was overwhelmed with the melting of the ice caps at the end of the ice age, and, as I said, they simply lost the battle itself. Along with the wall 3-5 foot sections of fluted columns have also been discovered, some still embedded in their original positions, others lying in a jumble on the sea floor, covered with sand. You have to realize that whenever there is a hurricane that goes through this area, it shifts the sand on the sea bottom around here significantly. Dr. David Zinc and other explorers have been frustrated, because every once in a while they will find something, locate something, and pinpoint it one year, and they come back on another expedition and it is not there any more; it is buried. But then they find something else that they did not find before. You have to deal with a lot of shifting sand. Since the pillars appear at intervals along the sunken wall, they have formed one continuous portico. Both the wall and pillars show a high level of engineering skill in their construction.

There is marble that has been found in this area, and marble is not indigenous to this area at all; we are dealing with an area that is mainly limestone and coral. There were also pieces of coal that were found in a 1979 expedition here, and again, the piece of coal that was found either comes from Pennsylvania, or does not even come from the United States at all. In other words, Pennsylvania would be the only place that coal that pure would be discovered, unless it was from somewhere else around the world. So, we are talking about stones that have been imported.

I talked with a gentleman when I was down in Murphy, North Carolina, two weekends ago, whose name is Millard Deutsch. He was telling me that in the 1920's there was an engineer who built a series of seawalls along the Florida coast. The reason that he was able to underbid his competitors was the fact that he did not have to import the granite from out of state. He was able to find the granite in blocks off the Florida coast itself. What they did was pull apart several buildings and structures off the Florida coast, and then utilize those blocks for the breakwaters along the Florida coast. There are still some people alive today with whom Millard has talked, who do remember, and he said there are all kinds of structures off the Florida coast and some of them are still there. Unfortunately, they have been torn apart. But, he said that there are some granite stones that they found that are still out there that are used in the breakwater in which there is a perfectly drilled hole right through the granite, which is glass smooth on the inside. This is amazing; to be able to drill through granite and to create holes with mirror-like surfaces on the inside, indicates some kind of method, either laser or sound. So these different wall sites appear to be extended not just simply around Bimini, but they also go to other places.

Also associated with the Bimini sea wall, divers have uncovered a stone archway at a depth of 12 fathoms; a truncated pyramid with a base 140 x 180 feet with a flattened top; a huge circular stone construction made of 20 foot blocks that appears to have been a well-designed water reservoir when it existed above sea level.

Near Andros Island and near Pine Key, there are also structures there. In 1969, airline pilots photographed a rectangular shaped wall seen on the sea floor through calm waters, measuring 100 x 60 feet, with the east side partitioned off, and the western corners also being partitioned off. It is interesting because in size and design, it is almost identical to the Temple of the Turtles, which is found at Uxmal in the Yucatan, which is another site for another one of the halls of records. So there may be some connection here.

All through the Caribbean area: There is a sea wall 30 feet high and running in a straight line for miles off Venezuela near the mouth of the Orinoco River; there is an acropolis complex, complete with streets covering five acres, just off the Cuban coast in six feet of water; remains of sunken buildings are off Haiti and Santo Domingo, one measuring 240 x 80 feet that can be seen on clear days; several stone causeways lie on the sea floor 30-100 feet below the surface, which leave the shores near Quintana Roo in Mexico, and Belize on the Yucatan coast, and continue seaward for miles toward unknown destinations. There is a sea wall that runs along a submarine cliff near Key Lobos(?). There are huge stone squares, rectangles and crosses of perfect design that can be viewed off the windward and leeward sides of all the keys, down to Orange Key, and on the south shore of Miami River in southern Florida are the remains of a sunken prehistoric harbor, complete with finely-made tool marks seen on the rocks. In other words, there is not just simply a tremendous potential for archaeological research just around Bimini itself, but Bimini could be used as a base for exploring the various sunken ruins all around the entire Carribean area. The archaeological center, I believe, can also work in terms of tapping into different ancient temples, and possibly even, so many of these temple sites may have actually been placed on other healing centers, like at Bimini, so that their location might be also utilized at some point in the future, or, again, somewhat in the design of the temples or there might actually be actual records or artifacts or instruments found in these temples, which I think would be an aid toward the research and clinic aspects for the healing endeavors on Bimini itself.

In the Poseidia Institute expedition of 1979 headed by Dr. David Zinc, the expedition used two different kinds of remote sensors. One was to detect minute variance in ambient temperature of the water, and also the other one was to detect ferrous and non-ferrous metals. One of the things that the expedition was trying to look for was a series of two columns that were found near the Bimini area that were located in 1956 I believe it was, or 1954, one of the two. These were photographed by Dr. William Bell. What was interesting is that these two columns stand straight up off of the floor, the sea floor, but when the pictures were taken, they showed different kinds of energies emanating from the columns. So there appears to be a tremendous amount of energy associated with some of these different sites. The 1979 expedition was trying to locate, to relocate those columns, but unfortunately they were not able to do so. Again, with the shifting sand, they have probably been buried again by who knows how many storms that have come through there.

One of the things that they did find with the metal detector was that there was a whole series underneath the road(?) site and other places along the coast, they found a whole series of metal concentrations. They believe that there may be something underneath the sea floor in many of these different places. (I have the information here:) the two columns were photographed in 1958 by Dr. William Bell. The photographs indicated that there was a certain radiation emanating from the base of the columns themselves. They also received reports by a fisherman in the area that there is like a stone hinge complex just beyond where the Bimini roadside is at. There is supposed to be like 30-40 stones that are toppled over, but there is one set that is a trilithon(?), in other words, two upright stones with a lenth(?) over the top, which is supposed to, it was seen about ten years before that, in 1969, and that particular fisherman has been back there twice, I should say three times, and has seen that. But they were unable to discover that.

The metal sources appear to have been below 2-3 inches below the limestone on the sea floor itself. Unfortunately, the archaeological team was not able to penetrate and determine the exact age. However, there are some indications from some of the psychic readings that were done that some of these may contain metal artifacts either in the form of plates, possibly even inscribed plates; there may also be different kinds of instrumentation, machine parts, who knows what. Dr. Ray Brown, when he found his submerged pyramid back in 1970, near the Berry Islands, which is another primary location for different things, some of the other divers who were with him who did not see the pyramid, because he was separated from them at the time, but they did bring back strange metal artifacts that appear to have been parts of some kind of other strange machinery complex that have some very strange properties in terms of the alloy itself. I have not as yet come across any analysis of those artifacts to date. But they are still there, and it is very possible that particularly in the Bimini area there may be sites wherever these metal concentrations are. These may contain different the remains of either machine parts or whatever, that could be tapped into.

Map dowsing and pendulum work that I have done on the various maps of the Bahama Islands indicate that the strongest readings that I have for the location of a potential research and clinic center is the Bimini Islands. In particular, the strongest reading that I get is in the south Bimini area, not too far from the airport. What I am sensing is that this would be the place, the south island would be the location for the healing center. Also, this would be in the location of some of the healing springs in that area. There would be the archaeological part of this would be located in the north island, somewhere in the area around Paradise Point, where so much research has already been done. But there needs to be a separate facility that would be located up there that would be the center of not just simply for archaeological research and even geological research as well, not simply for the Bimini area, but also for the entire Carribean area.

I have some other weaker indications. One is the Berry Islands, which are small islands off to the east of Bimini. I get a very small swing here for possibly a clinic or some kind of rest area. I also get a little bit larger swing as a possible location for an archaeological research center. I get a big "no" for Andros Islands, which is surprising because that is one area that I was looking at just from one level, and it just gives me a very large no. All of the other islands come basically up with the no, except for the Grand Bahama Islands. I get a very small yes on that one as another possible location. But many of the other islands, the Eleuthera, the Great Abaco Island, and many of the other cays and so forth don't really- I get some real negative aspects on those areas. I get a small yes on the possibility of actually getting a small island. And, again, this would be in the area of the Berry Islands. This seems to be the location, one of the different cays, there is a cluster of small islands all through this area here. And this seems to be, if the Foundation chose to get its own island, it seems that that would be one of the primary areas to do that. But, as I said, that is a smaller among, the least among the different potentials. The greatest potential, the number one potential, is Bimini, particularly the South Bimini area. The second best is the Berry Islands, and the third best is really the Grand Bahamas.

What I am sensing from the readings also, that in terms of the Grand Bahamas, that there might be an interconnection made between the research clinic for the Foundation and with the different cancer research clinics that exist in the Grand Bahama area and in other areas of the Bahamas as well. That it is very possible that some of the Foundation funding may go into that area. I would suggest that we check with Mike Gergely, especially, in terms of, since he is the one who is working with the legality with Blue Cross/Blue Shield in the state of Michigan, of helping to pay for some of those people who are going there to get treatments on the island itself, that through him we can find out more specifically the names of different organizations, and then possibly check them out and see what kind of work they are doing. By helping to fund these, these in turn will in time have a direct association with the Fetzer Foundation clinic/research center itself.

While I was at the A.R.E. library, I did work, not just simply on the Cayce readings themselves, but they also have a very excellent general metaphysical library. They also acquired, the Cayce Foundation acquired about a year or two ago, the library of Egerton Sykes. He was a leading researcher into the mysteries of Atlantis. He did tremendous very extensive research into the area of myths and legends and stories. He also, there was some information there in his library that I found, some of his viewpoints concerning the different aspects of the Bimini area. Looking into different accounts, everything from Ireland to South America, Central America, and so forth, he believed that the Bimini site was linked with what he called the original concept of the Holy Grail: a healing cup, that the grail was a healing cup. He called the site Murias. This was the temple of the translucent walls and the golden gates. It was a healing temple. It was dedicated to the god Min, which is actually an Egyptian god, this is the god of fertility. And he was associated with Pata(?) who is the god of rejuvenation. And he believes that the name Bimini, has the name Min in it. Also, that it had to do with a combination between the name of Min and the Benu(?) bird, which is the Egyptian god of transmutation, also dealing with rejuvenation.

This is the area also, of the original fountain of youth. The temple's healing function led to (of course) all kinds of legends, which led Ponce de Leon to come to the area. Sykes believes that the temples in this area here further, there was a series of occupations, dealing with healing aspects, and that this was really a school where not just simply Atlantians, but people from Egypt, the proto(?) Phoenicians, and many other cultures came to learn. So again, it was not just simply a healing center, it also appears to have been a learning center as well. In Sykes' library, I also found a book, L'Histoire de l'Origine de Bimini, a French book, by Pierre Carnac. He made connections between some of the road site, wall site sunken remains off of Bimini, and farflung megalithic (?) sites, Keltic remains in Ireland, and also as far north as Mystery Hill in New Hampshire. He mentions also that he believes that the name Bimini means the "island of the wreath" or crown, or the island of the old wall or the island of the ruins. So this appears to have been known as a sacred spot, and also as an ancient spot through many different ages.

Sykes was also convinced that there is a connection between the Bimini site and of course what Cayce talked about there being in this area the great crystal of Atlantis, and the crystal skull, the Mitchell Hedges' crystal skull that was found in 1927 in Lubaantun in the country of Belize, and that he believes that there was some indications that the skull may have actually originated in that area, and that it, too, also has some healing properties which have yet to be tapped into. Mr. Fetzer in particular, those who were up there at the crystal skull seminar last September, I think it was, or last October, in New London, Ontario, we all felt those energies there. And there may be a very definite link then, between the skull and the Bimini area.

To summarize my impressions, both in terms of the map dowsing, the pendulum work, and my research observations from looking over the Cayce readings, looking over the archaeological and geological research that has been done in the Bimini area, I would highly recommend that as a location, the Bimini area should really be chosen as a, be considered as a primary area for consideration as a combination between the research clinic center for the Foundation, for doing healing work, doing work with rejuvenation, and that this be associated with also, adjunct to this, an archaeological research center, and that the two would then work hand in hand. Through the archaeological work, different aspects may come into discovery, in terms of the archaeological sites, that this all, again, is also, on another level, it's like it's not an end unto itself, but a means toward a greater end, that what is going to be worked with there, the center that is going to be established there is also going to be a school. I think that there should be some kind of a center there that is established, both again, in terms of the healing aspects and the archaeology, in terms of some kind of an educational center as well, that would be linked directly, of course, with the world center here in Kalamazoo, and that these different aspects are really a preparation, will be in preparation for the rising of the hall of records which is going to be in the Bimini area, which I believe also, from the different indications here, is a hall that is going to contain primarily information of a healing nature. I think that if all of these things can be prepared for, this I think would be very beneficial. I would say, I would recommend that the next stage is for me to do some more detailed dowsing work with the maps. Not with simply the maps that I have, but with the nautical maps that are supposed to be coming. Bruce is supposed to be getting those for me, and that I am able to do some more detailed dowsing with that, that would be one stage. The next stage also, I would say, either myself, or whoever wants to go along with this, that there be some on-site dowsing work done in the Bimini area itself, that overtures be made to the Bahamian government in terms of the possibilities of acquiring land, either on Bimini itself, or looking into the Berry Islands area, in order to obtain an actual island itself. Also that overtures and communications, and also possibly even funding be directed toward those cancer institutes or those cancer research centers in the Bahamas that are being utilized now by many people here in the States. The stage beyond that would be then to focus and center on acquiring land, wherever it is finally chosen, the final choice for the Foundation, and that in the meantime also, that we begin to gather together potential researchers, not just simply in terms of the healing aspects or the research clinic aspects, but also in terms of the archaeological aspects as well. These would be individuals who would have background in archaeological research, but would also be open to the more metaphysical concepts, and particularly who are open to the concepts of the existence of Atlantis, and past civilizations the remains of which would be discovered in that area.

Again, I think that there is a tremendous potential here. And again, we are just dealing with potentialities. I think that while the potentials existed back in 1926 and 1927, for certain moneyed groups to fulfill the concept of ^Uresort area in Bimini, I believe now, that while that was not manifested, while that did not manifest, that the potential exists now for this to manifest, in terms of being a healing center, and an archaeological/geological research area. As we put that into action, as we begin to plan this, as we begin to work on this as a viable project, I believe ⁺we are going to find that there is many old souls out there who are going to be attracted to the old souls who are already in the Foundation that many of the healers are going to be attracted back to this area; many of the healers who have worked in these areas before. I believe also, that those who worked with the healing department, the healing chambers, the healing records of the Bimini hall of records are also going to be attracted to this area as well. There appears to be as far as Cayce is concerned, not only the benefits of utilizing the healing waters on the island itself and the healing life that exists off the coast itself, but there is also going to be many other benefits in terms of different kinds of minerals and possibly crystals and stones, and in particular, gold that is going to be found in the area also, not as an end unto itself, but I believe as a healing, demonstrating the healing properties of different minerals and stones and crystals. So again, this is my recommendations come very strongly. I am looking at this not just simply on a right-brain ^{ed}basis as far as the readings are concerned, my own readings and the Cayce readings, but I am also looking at this on a left-brained basis, in terms of the research potentials which are here, the healing potentials which are here, and looking at it from a practical point of view as well. Again, the potentialities exist, and I think that the Foundation has all the resources necessary to fulfill and manifest this.
